Read What Wine Expert Has to Say About Wines and Spicy Foods

I generally do not recommend wine with hot and spicy foods. However, I received the e-mail from Warren Edwardes, CEO of Wine for Spice Ltd., London, England. According to Mr. Edwardes not drinking wine with spicy foods may be a thing of the past. Warren Edwardes . . . "has often been part of winning teams in wine tasting competitions. . . But what was missing, according to Edwardes, was a good selection of wines specifically created, and not just marketed, to be drunk with curries and spicy food.

When I visted Edwardes' site these two short paragraphs jumped out at me Wine for Spice was created to specify and specially commission quality wines to complement Indian as well as other spicy food such as Sichuan & Hunan Chinese, Indonesian, Malaysian Thai and Mexican food. and Wine for Spice's New Delhi born, founder & CEO, Warren Edwardes worked closely with the best - the producer of the pre-

Following successful trials in London, England, Wine for Spice's "wine to add a sparkle to curries and spicy food" semi-sparkling Raja Rosé, Viceroy White and Rani Gold are to be launched this autumn (fall) in the UK.

"I normally drink beer or sparkling water with curries.", says New Delhi born, Wine for Spice founder, Warren Edwardes who is of Goan and Anglo-Indian descent.

The idea for the wines came to Edwardes, CEO of Delphi Risk Management, a London based financial product innovation

"It occurred to me that a naturally fermented semi-sparkling young wine with not as much fizz as Champagne and Cava would add a zing to and bring out the flavours of Asian food. But not aerated wines as the gas soon fizzles out or those sickly drinks that taste like fizzy
sweetened grape juice."

"I don't drink flat warm beer with my curry - so why should I drink flat warm wine with it?"

Wine for Spice's wines are produced and bottled in Spain by the pre-eminent producer of semi-sparkling wines.
