A new trio of wines designed to accompany curry will be on the market from September this year thanks to Warren Edwardes and his Wine for Spice Ltd.

The semi-sparkling Raja Rose, Viceroy White and Rani Gold are currently being trialled in London. Warren, who normally drinks beer or sparkling water with curries came up with the idea whilst trying to come up with the solution to a financial problem.

New Delhi born and with Anglo-Indian and Goan descent, Mr Edwardes said "It occurred to me that a naturally fermented semi-sparkling or spritzy young wine with not as much fizz as Champagne and Cava would add a zing to bring out the flavours of Asian food."
